CARICATURE
DRAWING WITH
Scott Harris

I am an illustrator, designer and motion graphic artist, having worked in the advertising and corporate fields approximately forever. I've worked on countless national brands (Coke, McDonalds, P&G, Dell, Nintendo, Salesforce, to name a few) for the top agencies in Chicago and San Francisco. My most recent large-scale project was for the Dell Technology World conference in Las Vegas, a giant multi-screen animated show opener for which I served as creative director and co-animator. I also find time to paint (you can check my work out at ScottHarrisArt.com)! Before all of this, I started out as a cartoonist, and as a boy I was steeped in comics, cartoons, comic strips and like all boys my age, Mad magazine. In high school and college I created editorial cartoons for the school newspapers. It's a great discipline to learn the craft of caricaturing. You can see samples of my artwork at [www.ScottHarris-Art.com or on Instagram at @scottharris_art

In a world where schools have either diminished or completely gotten rid of art classes, ArtSeed is an oasis for creativity, serving the underserved by providing a wonderful space to make, to play, to take chances, to show their art, and to rub elbows with instructors of all stripes. Lesson: Caricature Drawing

Materials/prep: Graphite pencil, color pencils, eraser, white drawing paper

Introduction/goal: Create a caricature using a photograph as reference

Activity: Look at examples of caricature and watch a demonstration, then draw your own

Close: Share your results with the other participants

Challenges: Learning how to look and examine facial structure, become comfortable with exaggeration

Note: Caricatures do not necessarily have to be of someone known or recognizable, and can be completely made up. The idea is just to have fun!
